I find the never ending expansion of Adelaide northwards to be short sighted and not in the interest of human benefit and sustainability. The conversion of food producing areas to the north of the city to urban use a terrible waste of productive potential. Food and water are going to be the critical issues of the future and the loss of market gardens and highly productive agricultural land nothing short of stupid. Better expand existing rural centres with better communications and future and vastly improved transportation initiatives that are on the horizon than waste irreplaceable resources on what is best described as greed for short term gain
