Part of Linden Park and Hazelwood park were initially in the general neighbourhood zone which was good.

This would have given more development opportunities to the community and the Burnside council and businesses.

More and more people would be in this zone and it would be good to see the business growing.

There might be few people who might be complaining about having more houses in this council. In the short run it is a problem to house more people as it would have congestion on our roads , schools, parks etc. But that would be a good problem to have, as the council can atleast plan and put in more infrastructure down the track. Whereas if the council maintains status quo with the development there wouldn't be any new major developments and Burnside council could end up losing financially. If we see the Prospect suburb development we can see as to how the suburb has grown exponentially after it approved the apartment living there. More small businesses are set up and running efficiently I guess because of more population.

So, in short would like to have more subdivisons in Linden Park and Hazelwood Park as was proposed in the initial stage.

Thanks
